Sigma Theta Tau International ~ Delta Tau Chapter-At-Large

From the President...

Greetings to the membership of Delta Tau Chapter-At-Large, and welcome to our new members inducted on Sunday, April 1, 2001. As I begin my term as President, I am grateful for the opportunity to serve in this capacity. As we plan our future together, I hope you will share in my enthusiasm about our chapter's plans and goals, which Sigma Theta Tau International has outlined in the Strategic Plan 2005 (Available at the society's webpage: www.nursingsociety.org)!

The core of the plan consists of our vision to lead and our mission to serve, support, and improve the health of people worldwide. Vision and mission statements are important because they keep us focused on the goal. However, these statements can lose their significance if we are not connected to the source of the vision and mission.

How can you grasp this vision to lead and this mission to serve, support and improve the health of all? You begin at the membership level. The success of the society is directly related to the commitment of its membership. As we begin to develop members across the span of their careers, we incite the retention of active members and encourage inactive members to become active members once again. We must meet the personal and professional needs of ALL members in order to lead, serve, support, and improve healthcare.

In addition, grasping the vision and mission requires building a strong chapter. Members make a chapter and a chapter is known by its membership. Each chapter is unique and requires specific resources. However, communication and collaboration are essential components in the strength of a chapter. Every member has the ability to contribute to the success of the organization.

I urge you to join me in planning and attaining our goals. Remember, our vision is to lead and our mission is to serve, support, and improve the health of the world's people. Help me in making this vision a reality!

21st Annual Induction Ceremony Celebrates the Growth of Our Chapter!

Congratulations to all the new inductees of Sigma Theta Tau, Delta Tau Chapter at Large. The first induction ceremony of the new millennium took place on April 1, 2001 at Holy Family College in Philadelphia, PA. Thirty new members received their honor cords that day.

This year we were lucky enough to get Mr. Ramón Lavandero to speak at our ceremony. His experience at Sigma Theta Tau International and his insight into the field of nursing made him an excellent candidate to speak to the new inductees. Mr. Lavandero brought the meaning of this organization alive for not only the new inductees, but also for the current members, faculty and family members as well.

In his speech, he reminded us of the importance of this organization, what it means to be a member both personally and professionally, and how we can influence the field of nursing by being active members of this organization.

Following the ceremony, current members, family, and faculty mingled with the new inductees as they enjoyed a nice light luncheon in the Commons. Current members chatted with new inductees and hopefully made this day a very memorable experience.

As the new inductees learn about Sigma Theta Tau International, we want to encourage them to become involved and make this chapter their organization. For more information on how to volunteer for different events, or to run for an upcoming office, please contact one of the current officers.

Nursing Nursing Back to Health . . . One Newspaper's Perspective

Our view: The nursing shortage poses risks not only to patients but to nurses themselves. Already overworked, many are forced to work overtime. There ought to be a law against it.

Nobody knows a profession like those who work in it. That's why the results of a January survey conducted by the American Nurses Association is so disturbing. Just take a look at these numbers: 75 percent of nurses surveyed said the quality of nursing has declined over the last two years; 56 percent said the time they have for patient care, likewise, has declined; and 40 percent said they would not want a close friend or family member cared for at the facility for which they work.

Those disturbing responses almost certainly are rooted in two troubling developments - the nursing shortage and forced overtime generated by the shortage. The former is driven by cultural and socioeconomic factors. For example, little girls no longer are funneled into health care by parent- and teacher-supported stereotypes. Also, more families can afford to send "all" of their children to college and a more enlightened society has emboldened women to venture beyond traditional female professions.

As a result, women obtain four-year degrees and often more in numbers equal to and even greater than men. And they compete with men, practically without discrimination, for most any job the market has to offer.

But with fewer women - and not enough men - getting into nursing, those staffing our hospitals, nursing homes and other healthcare facilities are working harder and longer. And they're not doing so by choice.

It's why hundreds of nurses converged on Harrisburg this week, National Nurses Week. They visited the Capitol in support of reasoned legislation that would ban mandatory overtime, an ill-conceived, knee-jerk reaction that nurses say merely drives people out of the profession. More worrisome is the potential danger tired, overworked nurses can pose to the sometimes critically ill people they care for.

Wouldn't you be tired if forced to work 16 and 24 hours at a time? There ought to be a law against it, and that's what state Representative Dan Surra has in mind. The Elk County Democrat's legislation fortunately has widespread support in the House and Senate. We encourage Bucks lawmakers to get on board - because we need to find ways to make nursing more appealing. And eliminating brutal hours under threat of job loss is an obvious starting point. That the situation exists at all is a scandal. As much as anything, it explains why 54 percent of nurses said they would not recommend the profession to their children or their friends, a telling and startling revelation this aging society had better address - soon.

The Delta Tau Holiday Tradition Continues...

Delta Tau holiday traditions continue at the Community Nursing Center and Holy Family Neighborhood Center. In keeping with the spirited tradition, Delta Tau Chapter-At-Large sponsored a "Christmas Dessert Festival" at the Community Nursing Center in Chester, PA on December 14, 2000. Many older adults attended this festive event, where various, decorative desserts were plentiful. In addition, the children at the Holy Family Neighborhood Center in the Frankford section of Philadelphia were treated to a great time of fun, games, food, and gifts. Many thanks to the faculty of Neumann and Holy Family Colleges, as well as Delta Tau members who assisted in making these events a success. We could not do this without your generous support! Plans are underway for next year's
